A police officer in New Jersey shot and killed a carjacking suspect after he allegedly crashed into the cop's unmarked car and failed to halt. Two off-duty police officers reportedly witnessed the crash and decided to pursue the suspect, who they later identified as 21-year-old Jose Oquendo. A few minutes later, one of the officers was allegedly told by a third officer that Oquendo had been located, but upon arriving, the suspect fled and was shot and killed. Footage of the incident obtained by CNN's Anderson Cooper shows two officers frantically attempting to open the suspect's vehicle door before they eventually break it off. "We're getting no response from the door," one officer is heard saying. The officers then both approached the door, one with his gun drawn, before one of the officers appears to suddenly pull the trigger, shooting the suspect, who, at the time, was not armed. ca3bfb1094
