Identification of latent inhibition as a biomarker of susceptibility to the effects of repeated stress. Stress treatments often induce persistent behavioral and neurobiological effects that influence later stress responses. In humans, vulnerability to these effects has been associated with subclinical levels of reactivity to stress treatment. In rodents, the effects of stress can be reduced or prevented by increasing the amount of time to the stress in a procedure called latent inhibition (LI). A number of studies have documented behavioral changes associated with repeated stress (RS), but the relationship between these changes and the production of LI is unclear. The purpose of the current research was to test whether differences in LI after RS would be associated with variations in later stress reactivity. Our findings indicate that the magnitude of RS-induced differences in reactivity to a stressor is dependent on the size of the LI effect in the preceding stress treatment. Therefore, RS induced a larger increase in reactivity to the stressor in rats that had LI than those that did not. These findings suggest that LI is a preclinical biomarker of susceptibility to the effects of stress treatments. Furthermore, by correlating the magnitude of the LI effects in both the present and previous studies, it can be hypothesized that a subgroup of subjects may be more sensitive to the effects of aversive stress treatment.

Q: Move mouse from one input to another I was wondering if you could move the cursor from an input to another with jQuery. So if I have this: ... and I would like the ability to click into the second input and be moved to the first without losing focus. And if I was to click into the first one, it would move me to the second input. I'm not sure how to go about doing this. Any ideas? A: This may be what you're looking for: `$("#input:first").focus();`

- - - - - Honey I was spending Christmas with my family, and I couldn't help but notice the sweet smell of honey everywhere. It was the same smell that I had with me in Reindeer School. It was in the breakfast tables, on the plates, and in the break room. My family was catching everyone's interest with their intense interest and fascination with the sweet, golden nectar. Honey is a sweet, sticky, golden syrup. It is made from the honeydew secretions, or honey, of the honey bee. The bees get their name from the Greek word
