

metal finishes include: silver, brushed, and matte gold. your choice of finish is important to you; our designers and pattern makers are aware of every detail and do their best to implement your design. gold offers the highest value performance, the best touch feel, the most attractive appearance, and the most versatility of any finish. gold is an electro-galvanized finish that will not be affected by moisture. gold does not tolerate normal levels of water and is acid resistant. matte gold is similar in appearance to silver or brushed gold. it is not 100 percent recyclable and is most often used as a base color for special finishes. like all matte finishes, it will not scratch or wear significantly, but its luminosity is much lower than gold or silver. plastic finishes include powder coat or powder coat metal & epoxy finishes. powder coat finishes are durable and require less maintenance than the standard epoxy coating used with electrocoat finishes. not surprisingly, they are good choices for applications where moisture, mechanical or chemical exposure is possible and the finish may need to be wiped down. epoxy finishes are more useful for exterior applications where the finish will only be in contact with air for short periods of time. powder coat finishes are also good for exterior applications when applied properly. epoxy and epoxy powder coat are both good choices for exterior applications. however, epoxy is not very scratch resistant, and may not be as durable on outdoor applications as powder coat finishes.

because there is usually only one, or a few, faucets in the kitchen sink in most homes, one of the most commonly encountered plumbing problems is dripping faucets. frequently, water is leaking through the aerator when the faucet is off. faucet leaks can be of several types. properly sealing the system is essential to ensure that the drain system is not compromised. a drain system's water seal is maintained by having adequate line size, competent professional installation, and adequate space and pressure between the pipe and drain pan. a manufacturer's advice or a professional installer's advice should be followed as to what is necessary to maintain the water seal. hydrostatic pressure is the greatest force on a drain. the pressure is created by the weight of the water that fills the pipe. the rule of thumb for installing drains is to avoid pressure and protect the drain from a drain backflow. if the time required to install a drain system's pipes is needed then it is important to locate the drain system after the installation of the walls and other drywall. if not installed properly, the drain system may require additional work to be done if it is located as shown in figure 9.16 . mastic. mastic, asphalt, clay tile, or asbestos cement is the cement used for drain tile. commonly found, round, flat, or corrugated, pipe is used to house drain tile. the pipe is placed within a clean drain pan. the drain tile, which is usually placed in one to four inch intervals, is then pressed or sealed into the opening in the pan. if a wash pipe system is used, a second pipe is placed over the drain tile. this pipe is longer than the drain tile and made of a different material. this longer pipe is called the cleanout pipe. 5ec8ef588b
